Dear readers,

the present Special Issue of Pacific Geographies discusses actual and controversial questions of decolonization and political independence in the Pacific Islands region. Many countries in the Pacific have gained their political independence in recent decades. But to this day, the decolonization process in the Pacific is not completed. New Caledonia, Tokelau, Guam, Pitcairn, Samoa and French Polynesia are recognized by the United Nations as “Non-Self-Governing Territories”. But independence movements also exist in Hawaii, Bougainville and West Papua. The legal status and the socio-cultural situation, as well as the shape of independence movements differ greatly in these territories. The present Special Issue deals with the decolonization debate in Hawaii, the Cook Islands and New Caledonia. Another research note proposes an interesting comparison between Asian (Gandhi, Rizal and Sukarno) and Pacific decolonization processes. One of the three case studies (Hawaii, Cooks Islands and New Caledonia) is co-written by a representative of an independence party, the FLNKS (kanak and Socialist National Liberation Front).

Further, we would like to inform you that we adapted the management of our journal according to international standards. We selected an editorial board consisting of 12 renowned experts of the Asia-Pacific region. In the course of the upcoming three years the members of the editorial will support us to disseminate knowledge about our journal within the scientific community, to invite particularly emerging scholars to publish at our journal, to advise on the contents and to do reviews or to suggest potential reviewers. As part of this re-structuring process Julia Albrecht, who has been managing editor since 2007, moved to the Editorial Board. On this occasion, we would like to express our deepest gratitude to her substantial efforts to keep this journal alive during the recent years and we are very glad that she will continue to support us as member of the editorial board.

We sincerely hope you enjoy this new issue of Pacific Geographies.

The managing editors, Michael Waibel & Matthias Kowasch
